2-28-2018

Buddy Gets His First Pair of Glasses

Tawnya Pastuck

Hilary Webb

Follow this and additional works at: https://commons.pacificu.edu/beetree

Part of the Fiction Commons, and the Optometry Commons

Recommended Citation

https://commons.pacificu.edu/beetree/6

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Pacific University Libraries at CommonKnowledge. It has been accepted for inclusion in Bee Tree Books by an authorized administrator of CommonKnowledge. For more information, please contact CommonKnowledge@pacificu.edu.
Buddy Gets His First Pair of Glasses

Description
Going to the eye doctor for the first time can be scary. That is why Buddy and his best friend Cody have shared their eye doctor adventure. While reading Buddy's book, children will be exposed to many common procedures and the positive outcome of getting an eye examination.

Disciplines
Fiction | Optometry

Publisher
Bee Tree Books

ISBN
978-1945398865

Comments
Tawnya Pastuck is an optometrist and avid animal lover living in the sunny state of Florida. She received her Doctor of Optometry from Pacific University College of Optometry and fellowship from the American Academy of Optometry. She has published scientific articles, however this is her first children's book. Her passion for community service has resulted in routinely providing eye examinations for those in need and co-chairing the non-profit corporation Comfort For Animals. The love for two rescue dogs, Buddy and Cody, and dedication to eye health and vision inspired her to write this book. However, it was the support of her husband, Craig, and talent of her cousin, Hilary, that brought the book to life.

Hilary Webb has loved dogs for as long as she can remember. She has also been drawing for as long as she can remember. When she isn't drawing dogs at her home in Salem, Massachusetts, she is either working as a designer for a local footwear company or making small leather goods in her studio while her husband works on his music projects next to her. Hilary illustrated this book while she was pregnant with her first child and would like to dedicate this book to her new family.

This book is available at CommonKnowledge: https://commons.pacificu.edu/beetree/6
Buddy
Gets His First Pair of Glasses

Written by Tawnya Pastuck
Illustrated by Hilary Webb
There is no textual content provided in the image.
The “Bee Tree”, an iconic ivy-covered tree that stood on the Pacific University campus for many years, was already old and hollow when pioneer Tabitha Brown arrived in Oregon in 1846. Mrs. Brown started a home for orphans that would grow into Pacific University. According to the Forest Grove News-Times, the tree was “said to have housed a swarm of bees who furnished the little old lady with honey which she sold to buy provisions for her orphan children.”
Buddy

Gets His First Pair of Glasses

Written by Tawnya Pastuck
Illustrated by Hilary Webb
For the love of children and dogs.
This is Buddy and his best friend, Cody. They love to play together in the sunshine.
While Buddy and Cody were taking their morning walk Cody said, “Let’s bark at the red bird in the tall tree.”
Buddy looked up and looked down at the tree. He said “I don’t see a red bird in the tall tree.”
“What?” Cody said.
“Well, let’s play with the yellow ball in the green grass.”
“I don’t see a yellow ball in the green grass,”
Buddy said a little confused.
Cody said, “Buddy, we need to tell Mrs. Shelley that you can’t see the red bird in the tall tree or the yellow ball in the green grass.”
“Great IDEA! Mrs. Shelley will know what to do,” Buddy said as they started off to Mrs. Shelley’s house.
When Mrs. Shelley heard Buddy and Cody’s concerns she said, “Buddy, let’s go see the eye doctor.”
Off they went to see Dr. Harris for Buddy’s first eye examination.
Buddy was a little scared. As Shelley was scratching behind his ear, she said “You don’t have to be frightened. Doctor Harris is very nice and Cody and I will stay with you.”
Buddy jumped up in the patient chair and said hello with a lick. “Can you see the top row of pictures?” Dr. Harris asked Buddy.
“They are a little fuzzy, but I think I can see a cat and a house...bark, bark,” said Buddy.
“Now let’s put a drop in each eye,” said Dr. Harris as she gave Buddy a smile. “As soon as I put in the eye drops, can you blink as fast as you can 20 times?”
“Blink, blink, blink.....4, 5, 6...20 times! Whew! That was not scary at all!” said Buddy.
“Good job! And I have just the thing to help you see better,” said Dr. Harris as she put a pair of blue glasses on Buddy.
“WOW! I can see everything,” said Buddy. Bark, Bark!!
The very next day Buddy and Cody went outside to play. Buddy said to Cody, “Let’s bark at the red bird in the tall tree.” They happily barked together at the red bird until it flew away.
A little while later Buddy said to Cody, “Let’s play with the yellow ball in the green grass.” They rolled the yellow ball with their noses and chased it together the rest of the afternoon.
At night Buddy and Cody snuggled down into their comfy dog beds. Buddy said, “Thank you for being my best friend Cody.” “Thank you for being my best friend too Buddy,” said Cody.
The End
Tawnya Pastuck is an optometrist and avid animal lover living in the sunny state of Florida. She received her Doctor of Optometry from Pacific University College of Optometry and fellowship from the American Academy of Optometry. She has published scientific articles, however this is her first children’s book. Her passion for community service has resulted in routinely providing eye examinations for those in need and co-chairing the non-profit corporation Comfort For Animals. The love for two rescue dogs, Buddy and Cody, and dedication to eye health and vision inspired her to write this book. However, it was the support of her husband, Craig, and talent of her cousin, Hilary, that brought the book to life.

Hilary Webb has loved dogs for as long as she can remember. She has also been drawing for as long as she can remember. When she isn’t drawing dogs at her home in Salem, Massachusetts, she is either working as a designer for a local footwear company or making small leather goods in her studio while her husband works on his music projects next to her. Hilary illustrated this book while she was pregnant with her first child and would like to dedicate this book to her new family.

Life was uncertain for Buddy and Cody for the first few years, but they soon found a home with open hearts to take care of them. Buddy is very friendly. He loves to give kisses and get belly rubs. Cody watches over his smaller brother Buddy and enjoys tasty treats. When the sun is shining you might find them swimming in the ocean, barking at birds or lounging on the back porch after a long walk. They both hope you enjoyed reading about their adventure!
Going to the eye doctor for the first time can be scary.

That is why Buddy and his best friend Cody have shared their eye doctor adventure. While reading Buddy's book, children will be exposed to many common procedures and the positive outcome of getting an eye examination.